

A short reflection on today's Gospel Matthew 18: 21-35

Forgiveness lies at the heart of today's Gospel. It has been calculated that forgiveness comprises two thirds of Jesus' teaching, a fact which must surely reveal how crucial it is to our salvation that we forgive those who do us harm.

The king in the parable in today's Gospel isn't necessarily a good man: he is capable of imprisoning, torturing and enslaving those who anger him, but even he is not immune to the pitiful pleas of the servant who cannot pay him back the enormous amount of money he owes him. In an act of extraordinary and unexpected generosity, the king releases the servant from his entire debt. Now one would expect this servant to behave in like manner towards the unfortunate person who happens to owe him a small debt. But no! He has the debtor thrown into prison and cruelly tortured. When this reaches the ears of the king he is enraged and punishes the ungrateful servant accordingly.

Jesus is making two related things clear in this parable. The first is that compared to the corrupt king, God is inordinately generous and forgiving: if the king can find it in himself to forgive a debt, then how much more will God forgive!

Secondly, Jesus enjoins us firmly and unequivocally to forgive each other as many times as we are offended against. Otherwise, how can we expect to be forgiven by God!

Forgiveness releases us from the heavy burden of resentment which corrodes our spirit. It alters our consciousness and introduces us to the possibility of transformation and to the inner goodness which acknowledges the presence of God within us.

The one who refuses to forgive imprisons his own soul and denies the beautiful energy which comes from the forgiving heart.
