

A short reflection on today's Gospel Matthew 25:1-13

Like all of Jesus' parables, the parable in today's end of time Gospel merits close attention. A superficial reading may lead us into believing that the wise virgins are less than generous to their foolish sisters: we may feel they should have shared their oil with them even if it meant that they themselves would end up in the dark. But that is not what Jesus is saying. Jesus is warning us against being unready, unprepared. The bridegroom may come at midnight, in the darkness, when least expected. Be careful. Be warned.

Jesus, in today's Gospel, is also saying that no-one else can save us from the result of our unpreparedness. We alone are responsible if we end up in the dark. But we must also remember that while light in Scripture is synonymous with awareness and enlightenment, darkness is often the most potent teacher. Which of us would disagree with the truth that we have learned most when we were in the middle of suffering!

Jesus, may we never lose our focus on you. May our hearts, minds and souls always be trained on you alone, living as you taught us to live, and forever ready to be reunited with you.
